For real food security, we need nature-friendly farming. Food security is often misunderstood. In the past, we were afraid of not having enough food. So the EU started supporting intensive agriculture. But today, we produce far too much.

88 million tons of food are wasted in the EU every year. We eat so much meat and dairy it’s ruining our health. 60% of rapeseed production is used as biofuel. We burn food for energy. Overproduction harms farmers by crashing prices.

Intensive agriculture puts us at risk. It harms nature and destroys the ecosystems we need to produce food in the long term.

We must transition to nature-friendly farming. Protecting our planet protects our ability to produce food into the future.

Reform the CAP. The EU’s common agricultural policy must support its farmers for the sustainable transition of our continent.
